Cleveland, the Greatest of His Day and Generation.

(Editor Interior Journal. STANFORD, Nov. 15 .- Grand, firm and calm Grover Cleveland, president of the United States, statesman and lawyer, stands to-day before the people who elected him to office; a man of principle above partisanship and wisdom above popularity. It is the custom now and long has been, to write one thing and think another, but what I write shall be facts in simple atire if dressed at all. The financial distress from which, like a ship submerged by angry waves, we are now emerging, that has covered the whole country, has not been viewed correctly, except as to its painful consequences; its cause misunderstood and misrepresented. So it is apparent in the result of recent elections, and the men and the party that made possible such a calamity by depleting the treasury-in opening the vaults to rapacious hordes of ex-soldiers, ex-suttlers, exteamsters, ex-bounty-jumpers, ex-camp- is considerably less than half of the en- reference to us as teacher is the result of home on Broad street. Deadly epidemics, poisonous contagions are not so infectious, not so panic stirring, not so fright convulsing as a money panic. The entire army of ghosts that buried to all the world, except the treasury, turned ertson in his plain and simple, yet forci- It was claimed that he caused the defeat about a year, but returned to his brothloose to scamper daily and nightly over the land, would never create the dread alarm that paralyzes the hand of the monied man that grips his dollars when he hears the distant cry of "hard times." So, but to cry "wolf" is all that is needed to bar the doors of the fold. Cleveland, unyielding, uncompromising, above the temptation to pander or cater to demands that would bring popularity and party agrandizement, required that right should prevail; that his administration should go down in history clean, pure and patriotic. Is he endorsed by his party? No! Did he foresee the result, as he did the wisdom of his on their arrival. course? On this doctors don't disagree. It may be regarded as an assured fact that the delegates to the Pan American Congress at Washington, who travel over the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway will, with one accord, praise its scenery and train service. There is nothing in the way of lovely mountain views and picturesque valleys of the Virginias, to compare with that through which the Chesapeake& Ohio Railrood passes. There is nothing of historic nature in America as great as a trip through the Virginias and there is no other railroad in America superior to the C. & O. in the smoothness and stability of its tracks, the F. F. V. Vestibule Limited being one of the famous trains of the world. The Chesapeake & Ohio passes through Bull Run, Manassas and other noted battle fields and is in all respects the best route for the West, North-West and South-West to the National Capital. Every virile man has a vein of brutality understand women who are of the vine in his composition, more or less deftly buried beneath the surface of his civilization, and every woman is at heart timid of encountering this brutalitythat is to say, every womanly woman is.

Almost any man brought into business relations with a woman not his em- cat, and bestows upon the little brute a ployee meets her propositions or arguments with either an air of good natured arch; sometimes she buys the love of a tolerance, or disquieted contempt of companion or of a servant; sometimes skeptical scrutiny, or of magnanimous she becomes a philanthropist and disacceptance, perhaps harder to bear than tributes her unused affection over whole any other of the demonstrations of his armies of orphans and phalanxes of wid-

A mortried to argue for their right to live their tal woman needs mortal love, and she own lives in their own way: "Go'spin, you jades; go spin!"

To epitomize the three utterances, women in general are to men in general either "darlings," or mothers of children, or household and domestic machines. Within these limits woman receives admiration, protection and a certain minating in marriage. A woman cares amount of appreciation from every grade | for the love of her own sex, for the love of men, but let her step outside these of her employees, for the love of her limits, let her try to meet man upon his friends, her circle, her society, be it a large own intellectual or authoritative plat- or a small body. Men say women have form, and her disadvantage is at once a passion for admiration, an appetite for made apparent, and her helplessness to overcome it stares her in the face.

No man ever meets her and converses upon momentous subjects precisely as he does with another man, and until this loves does admire, does flatter, does apis the case there are no true equal rights | plaud. These are some of the almost for the woman. The woman seeks an interview with her business man or lawyer; she wishes certain things done and done at once; the business man or the lawyer assures her with an air of indulgent padone, at least not in her way and at her time: that to sell, or to buy, or to invest, or to do whatever it is she wishes to do is not possible, or if possible not desirable, and she had better leave it all in his hands and rest secure that he will do that since we cannot have the real thing what is for the best. Now just here comes in the helplessness of which I If a person cannot have diamspeak. The woman feels confident that had better not try to persuade l. . .f or the thing she wishes could be done, and the world that rhinestones are just as that it would be well that it should be good, although she may choose to wear done, but she lacks the habit of command, the self confidence, the weight of will glitter, though it be in rhinestones, will, that would enable her to hold her own without agitation or struggle. A woman can no more hold her own against the well trained masculine mind in matters of business, the law or politics, than she can against the well trained masculine muscle in a pugilistic encounter, and this is what I mean by the inherent helplessness of woman. She may be better informed than the man, she may have a deep rooted conviction that she is right, but she does not dare to take the thing into her own hands and manage it in a manner contrary to that advised by the man who claims to know that she is wrong.

Another point of a woman's inherent man's sneer, or his half veiled contempt for her opinion, or his exaggerated politeness and deference, all tell upon her whip. She feels wounded, hurt, ashamed even, while remaining sure that she is in the right. She withdraws from the

He was defeated by frowns and sneers and smiles and jeers, behind which lay the power of life and death. Another element is woman's helplessness in her relations with man in her love of being loved, and this desire in its various developments is perhaps the root for nearly all occupations, of a woman's nature. Every woman has offices and honors, and above all their it, even the coarsest termagant, the hardright to regulate and control their own est and boldest wrangler for her rightsaffairs, whether political, financial, so- every one of them in the core of her

But all these cravings are but forms of the great craving for love which lives at the root of all. One who invariable signs and signals of love, and the instinct of the woman leads her to seek these signs and signals, although her reason whispers that they are false lights, mere igni fatui poorly countertience that what she suggests cannot be feiting the real sun and moon of her existence and very likely to lead her into a dark and dismal bog whence she issues mired and torn and weary.

It is not well to accept these shams, even though we bitterly tell ourselves we will take what at least resembles it. them; but, just as there are women who so there are women, and probably the majority of the sex, who will have that ornament more precious than diamondsthat crown of love which proclaims its wearer a queen indeed, and if it be but a pinchbeck and tinsel crown she will wear it all the same, although her own aching heart cry incessantly:

"It is no crown. I am no queen. My kingdom has gone from me, and I am desolate."

Well, to come back rather tardily to our muttons-to the discussion of woman's helplessness in her relations with the other sex.

She hates to do or say anything to forfeit her position in any man's estimation. helplessness is her sensitiveness. The Of course she does not expect or wish her broker, her lawyer, her pastor, or her political antagonist, or her intellectual opponent to be "in love" with courage and beat it down as if with her in the ordinary meaning of the blows of a fist or the stinging cuts of a phrase, but she does want, probably unconsciously to herself, that he should feel attracted to her; that he should like, admire, speak kindly, perhaps tenderly, contest apparently defeated; but, like of her to other persons; that he should Galilei, secretly murmuring, "But nev- be sorry to see her go and glad to have her come again. "That's nonsense! It isn't at all as you say! I shall lose my money, or my case, or my success if I do thus and so!"

Every woman knows that, though she gal as Juno, or even beautiful as Vestow upon his business, his pleasure, or to wish for her presence-in fact, he grows tired of her-and in the end feels her to be a bore and avoids her. I suppose most women would rather die than to know they were thus regarded by any their acquaintance, and if they feel themselves in proximity to any such position they will hastily sacrifice any theory, any scheme or any advantage and withdraw from the position their reason bids them hold with tenacity.

And here, of course, is the point I have intended to make. The woman's need of love, of liking or of approval from man is a terrible element of weakness in her nature. She is her own enemy. She is made helpless by her own best and sweetest characteristic. The motto of her career is, after all, no more than this, although the motto must be expanded to its very widest and most general limits:

"All for love, and the world well lost!"

BELLE ARCHER'S DEPARTURE.

She Has Invaded the Field of the Male Theatrical Advance Agent.

Belle Archer, the actress, has adopted a new line of work and has practically given up the stage to demonstrate that a woman can do as much, if not more, than a man in furthering the interests of a theatrical star. Miss Archer, besides being a professional beauty, is an actress of recognized ability and has supported artists of such magnitude as Jefferson, Nat Goodwin, E. H. Sothern and Alexander Salvini. During the summer she was a member of Mr. Litt's stock company, and, while in St. Paul, told Mr. Saint Maur, manager for Miss Carrie Turner, of her desire to become an advance agent. He was impressed with her earnestness, and after a long talk felt convinced that she possessed busi- Carriage Painter and Trimmer, ness qualifications of a high order and made her a flattering offer to go in advance of his enterprise. Therefore Miss Belle Archer is now a full fledged "advance lady," if such a term may be coined for the emergency.

Miss Archer is the daughter of James L. Mingle, who was the editor of the Philadelphia Sunday Dispatch for a long time, and many bright articles from her pen delighted its subscribers. In fact, the dramatic column was edited entirely

It can be readily imagined that Miss Archer will create considerable of a sensation in newspaper sanctums throughout the country, and that press agent traditions will receive a shock. It is probable, too, that a pretty business woman calling upon an editor and arranging for the insertion of her advertisements will prove a far more agreeable visitor than the average avant courier of a traveling company. If she combines tact with business ability, there seems no good reason why she should not succeed in a field hitherto unassailed by petticoats. Indeed a pretty woman traveling in advance of a theatrical company may prove a formidable rival of the present male agent.

For Baby's Crib.

Pretty little quilts can be made for baby's crib by taking 21 yards of scrim or cheesecloth, putting in the cotton batting smoothly, covering 12 yards, turning over the other 11 yards and neatly running it along the edge. If the edge is to be worked of zephyr, take about six strands of germantown wool and tie down in little tufts as in large comfortables. If the ruffle is put on in lace, then little bows are made of baby ribbon and tacked on in irregular rows. These little affairs can be made as inexpensive or elaborate as one wishes. When made of white or colored china silk and tied with ribbon, adding handsome lace, they make an attractive afghan for the carriage.

YOUR FUTURE

IS IN YOUR OWN HAND.

Palmistry assumes to tell what the lines in your hand indicate. It will amuse you, if nothing more. The above diagram almost explains itself. The length of the LINE OF LIFE indicates probable age to which you will live. Each BRACELET gives you thirty years. Well-marked LINE OF HEAD denotes brain power; clear LINE OF FORTUNE, fame or riches. Both combined mean success in life; but you must keep up with modern ideas to win it. You will find plenty of these in Demorest's Family Magazine, so attractively presented that every member of the family is entertained. It is a dozen magazines in one. A CLEAR LINE OF HEART bespeaks tenderness; a straight LINE OF FATE, peaceful life; the reverse if crooked. A well-defined LINE OF HEALTH spares you doctors' bills; so will the heaith hints in Demorest's. No other magazine publishes so many stories to interest the home circle. You will be subject to extreme of high spirits or deapondency if you have the GIRDLE OF VENUS well marked; keep up your spirits by having Demorest's Magazine to read. By subscribing to it for 1894 you will receive a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides the superb premium picture, 17x22 inches, "I'm a Daisy!" which is almost a real baby, and equal to the original oil painting which cost $300, and you will have a magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful filustrations and subject matter, that will keep you posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads, and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion magazine, us fashion pages are perfect, and you get with it, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. CHAPTER VIL A MYSTERIOUS FEUD

The manner and language of Mr. Dorion did but increase my anxiety to hear all that he could tell about my strange benefactor. To overcome his reluctance, I gave him the story of my life as it has been set forth in the previous chapters, dwelling much upon the deep impression that Mr. Bostock's liberality and his interest in me had produced, how for years I had cherished the hope of joining him here, the difficulties I had overcome to do so, and my present deep disappointment. My account evidently touched the listener.

"I see I must tell you what I know. You have a plain right to be told. The whole story has grown into the most disagreeable recollection of my life, and with any ordinary inquirer I should ignore the whole business. And if you will hear it, you must be warned, at the start, that it will furnish what I should think will be good reasons party. why you should now abandon your search for Pierce Bostock. Shall I go

"By all means."

I will put the narrative in his own language, as nearly as possible.

My acquaintance with Bostock began about the year 1841, when he came up here from Louisiana to look for a cotton plantation that would suit him. The account that he gave of himself was, I have no doubt, strictly true. He had been raising sugar almost all his life in La Fourche district of Louisiana, and he desired a change. He proposed to keep his great plantation there under the charge of a competent overseer, and to live here. He must be immensely wealthy; for seeing and liking this plantation he paid cash for it. If you'll look over it and speak to Mr. Bostock this morning with me in the morning, you can about him?" easily make up your mind that it required a fortune to do that.

He removed here that September. bringing some of his house servants. He had two children-an infant in its nurse's arms, little Coralie, of whom you will presently hear more; and a son, Conrad, then fifteen years old.

Me never said much about his wife. In fact, he never named her of his own accord; to those who thought they had the right to ask questions, he invariably replied that she was Parisian born, and could not live away from Paris, even with her husband and children. All understood from this that it was a case where husband and wife had "agreed to disagree."

I never could see that any one of the numerous slave women that were about this house in those days occupied the position of housekeeper. There were two or three of them who were quite capable of it; but Bostock was accustomed to get along in an easy, indulgent way, without anyone to look sharply after the household affairs. So there was waste, extravagance and confusion, as there always will be where there is an indulgent master, and no white woman to hold the rein over a lot of idle, shiftless darkies.

The boy Conrad I had better dispose of at once. It has been many years since I saw him. I certainly never want to see him again. He was a wild, undutiful fellow, and in continual difficulty with his father. When he was twenty he disappeared. I presume that Mr. Bostock knew where he went; but he' never mentioned him and nobody cared to know. If there could be such a thing as a born gambler, I should say that Conrad DOSLOCK was one. When but sixteen he would go to Vicksburg and spend days and nights there, in the lowest resorts along the river. He never seemed to me to stand in the least awe of his father, but Mr. Bostock always appeared uneasy when he was about. When he went away there was a rumor that he received a large sum of money from his father upon condition that he should never return. This may have been mere rumor; I only know that the people about here never did see him again, and that I, knowing as much as anybody of the family in those days, never saw the least sign of affection between father and son.

* To a person who had never seen Pierce Bostock, all this would naturally convey an unfavorable impression. It would be said that there seemed to be something unexplained, and that the man's life could not have been what it ought to have been. To you, who saw him at the time that everybody was charmed and captivated by him, I can say that we hardly bestowed a thought on these things. The man made friends with everybody. This house was Goodfellow's hall to the men; if the ladies could not come here because there was no Mrs. Bostock, nor even a housekeeper, they nevertheless spoke of its master as the most gallant and agreeable of men. Especially was this so after he had got rid of his scapegrace son. There seemed then to be not a cloud in his sky. He was cheerful, even hilarious, the idol of his friends, owning the finest cotton lands in middle Mississippi. You have heard something of southern hospitality; you should have seen for yourself how it was dispensed here in the days of Pierce Bostock.

Yet I have not named the chief source of this man's happiness. It was his daughter Coralie.

She was about fifteen when I last saw her; she must be in the vicinity of eighteen now. My young friend, you'll agree that I am rather too old a man to go into any raptures about female beauty. You saw my wife and daughters; they are good enough for me; they are my modthat Coralie Bostock, when I last saw her, was the finest girl that I ever laid eyes on; and I suppose that she is today the most beautiful one at the south. There are not many pure native blondes among us; she is one. But her hair, her eyes, her eyebrows and long lashes are dark as midnight.

She was slender, but not petite, in figure; her smile would captivate you; her laugh was more musical than the song of the mocking bird. Her manners were winning and gracious, even from a little girl.

She seemed the very apple of her father's eye. At one time he took her down to New Orleans, and left her with the Sisters of the Sacred Heart to be educated. But he could not do without her. In less than a month he had brought her home, and from that time he had her teachers here in the house half the year. She learned quickly; music and the languages seemed to come to her like a second nature. And never did child more warmly reciprocate a parent's lavish affection than did Coralie that of her

Time passed on, and that fatal April of 1853 came round.

Bostock had issued invitations for a gentleman's dinner party. I was invited, of course. Alphonse Basnet, a Frenchman owning the plantation adjoining the one I then occupied, called on me in the morning, and asked me if I should attend Bostock's

I told him that I should.

"Well," he said, "I want your advice. I am asked, too. A countryman of mine, Castex by name, who has lived in Louisiana, and more lately in Arba, arrived at my place yesterday. When I told him of my invitation he became greatly interested and asked me to take him along."

"Take him, then. That, I believe, is one of the usages of society the world over." "Yes, to be sure; but Castex leads me to think that he has known our host before. He has asked me fifty questions about him. He seems much more interested than he naturally would be, growing out of any ordinary acquaintance in past years. I must take him, of course. What I want you to advise me about is: Shall I go over

I was on the point of advising Alphonse to do so, by all means, as I certainly should have done had Castex been my visitor. I have often thought, that, had I obeyed my impulse, the bloody combat that has been described to you might have been avoided. Then came the reluctance to interfere in a matter of other men's social responsibilities, and I declined to advise him. Alphonse returned home, and his guest accompanied him to the dinner-party unheralded.

It so happened that these two arrived last. With them there were thirteen in the parlors, the host making the fourteenth. All who had been invited were present, save one; and I remember that as Mr. Castex was presented to the company, there was much remark and jest about our good luck in having him there, so as to avoid the zwkward thirteen at the table.

When he was introduced to the host, a different scene occurred. Mr. Bostock started, changed color, withdrew his proffered hand and made a slight bow instead. Castex smiled, bowed, and turned away. In my eyes he had a most disagreeable face, and the smile was very nearly a sneer.

It was an awkward incident, and threw a chill over the party at the start; for everybody observed it. Still, there was no outbreak just then. Dinner was soon announced, and Mr. Bostock led the way to the hall.

The host was at the head of the table, of course; I happened to be at the foot. Next on the right of the head was a doctor; next sat Basnet, his friend beside him.

The soup had but just been served when Coralie, then but twelve years old, came to an open door and stood an instant. She evidently desired to speak to her father, but, seeing that he and his guests were seated, she went away.

Castex saw her, and stared at her.

Directing the attention of Bostock to her, he put a question to him in French. It was answered in the affirmative. Basnet says that the question was:

'Is that your child, monsieur?" Then, upon receiving the reply, Castex leaned over the angle of the table and made a rapid rejoinder also in French. Basnet distinguished the words: "Wife," "avenged" and "New Orleans." More than these nobody understood. Nobody but the host. The remark, whatever it was, was for his ears, and he heard every word of it. He looked at Castex-horror, indignation, hate, were in the look. The attention of the whole table was fastened upon the "Gentlemen," said Bostock, "something very disagreeable has occurred. I could pardon much in a man sitting at my table and eating my salt; but I say now that either Napoleon Castex or I must leave this table. Well knowing that his presence in my house and at my board would be idiocy, he has taken advantage of a social license to force himself upon me. That I could endure in silence, out of regard for my friends, that nothing unseemly might occur here. But he is not content with that exhibition of his malignant heart; he has just this moment put upon me an insult which I cannot and will not tolerate. If I could I know not what next to expect from him. I repeat iteither he or I must leave this table."

In the painful silence that succeeded this startling speech, all eyes were fixed on Castex. He rose from his seat, cool and smiling. "It pleases me very much to retire," he said. "Witness it, messieurs!-yonder gentleman drives me from his table and his house.'

He bowed, and immediately left the room. Alphonse Basnet squirmed in his chair, and at last blurted out: "Bostock, my dear fellow - excuse els among women. Yet I must say is a wretched business; I hope it will me-but you see I can't remain. This end here. But I brought my friend here, and of course I must go with

And he did. The soup grew cold, and was removed untasted; course after course of the choicest dishes succeeded and were hardly touched. Everybody was under a dreadful constraint; occasionally there was a solitary remark, but the effort to keep up a conversation was a flat failure. I have said so much, that I ought to tell the whole truth. When the wine appeared, the guests turned to it as a relief from the awkwardness of the situation. I presume everybody drank too much; I am certain that I did. I will except Bostock. He sat pale, rigid and silent through it all. The guests departed early, with hardly an effort to make the usual compliments to the host.

The next morning I was hardly out He looked as stern and white as when he was denouncing Castex at his own the note. Take it to him, and then go to the man that he names as his friend."

"Well, he's challenged you," was my salutation.

I was thunderstruck. I tried to remonstrate with him. I told him that, so far as an outsider could judge, if anybody had cause to send a challenge. it was Castex. I begged him to tell me, in the strict confidence of friendship, what the language was that Castex had uttered to him. I told him that I could not act intelligently for him in this matter, unless I was advised. He peremptorily refused to tell "You have been my friend, Dorion," he said. "When I say to you that no human being must know my cause of offense, you will believe that there is the best of reason for my silence. Napoleon Castex knows, no man better knows, the nature of his offense. He knows me, also; and he understands that if he were to lisp a hint of my reasons for challenging him, I would seek him and shoot him down like a dog! Don't argue with me, Alfred Dorion; I tell you the man is a coldblooded scoundrel; he has sought me out to force a quarrel upon me, and laughing merrily. there are the best of reasons why the affair must go on."

There was nothing for me to do but to deliver the challenge. I found Castex cool, polite and consenting.

"There is not one of my name," he said, with his marked French accent, "who ever refused the request of a gentleman to meet him on the field of honor. M. Bostock thinks him- Ledger. self insulted. Some might think that I was. No matter; here is his challenge. Take it to my dear Alphonse; he will arrange everything with you. I only say to you, that my remark to M. Bostock was the truth. He knows guage of la belle France, that others might not understand it. So much you may tell him, if you choose."

The affair went on to its frightful end. Nobody could discover the truth. Basnet tried his best to make his man divulge the cause of offense, but in

"I only told him the truth, and told it in French, that it might not be heard by others. After I have fought htm, I will tell it very loudly, in your harsh English, do you be sure. Meanwhile, I am quite willing to fight him. I knew him long before you did."

The wound that Pierce Bostock received was as nearly fatal as a wound can be and leave the victim alive. The ball traversed his lung; nothing but the extraordinary skill of the doctor saved him. The doctor had served in the Mexican war, and happened to witness the successful operation of a Mexican surgeon upon a similar wound of Gen. Shields, by cleansing it with a silk handkerchief. In this way Bostock's life was saved; but the fever that followed confined him to his bed for weeks, drained his strength, and left him only the shadow of his former self.

His affection for his daughter seemed doubled, if that were possible, by this dreadful experience. In every waking hour he wanted her with him. In his delirium he would call her name; when conscious, he would hold her hand and look silently into her face as she sat by his bed.

I used often to call upon him while he was confined to the house. One day he sent Coralie out of the room and asked me to shut the door.

"You are still my friend, Alfred Dorion-are you not?" he abruptly be-"To be sure I am. While I am dreadfully distressed by what has happened-" "No matter about that. I want you to tell me something. What happened after I got that man's bullet? I think my senses were wandering. What did I say?" I told him. I repeated his expressions-that he regretted that he had killed Castex; that he wanted to spare him a retraction of the words which had caused the duel. His face darkened as he listened. "Do you mean to say that I said all him; that he was anxious to hear from that silly stuff?" "I have only repeated your own

"Then my brain was wandering. Dorion, I meant to kill him. He has gone to be judged, as I must be one day; but, I tell you, I am not sorry he has gone. He well knew when he came up here with his malignant tongue that either his life or mine must be forfeited."

You can imagine what effect such a declaration had on me. It showed me a side of Bostock's character that I had never suspected to exist. I began to draw away from him, as did others of his friends.

In less than two years after the due! us. His nature seemed to have changed. He became cold, reserved and haughty. He was very little seen away from his home. When he removed to Louisiana, he passed away from all intercourse with his old friends here. He has answered no letters. When I bought this place, I negotiated with him through an agent. You can see, knowing all this, that his life before he came here was clouded with something fearful and mysterious. I have wearied my brain in conjecturing what it can be. His wife, Conrad, Coralie, -which of them does it affect-or does it relate to all of them?

If you can guess, you are shrewder than I.

It is especially famous for its dolls, and it can produce the noblest ladies, the most lifelike men and the prettiest baby dolls you ever saw. At the world's fair there is a very large "No. I shall challenge him. Here's and beautiful exhibit called the "Sonneberg doll exhibit," in which there is a collection of the most interesting dolls in the world. The dolls are in groups, and, from a distance, you lish Writer. An English writer has recently made a study of the queer things swallowed it to be the truth; and he has not the by fish. He leaves out of the question grace to see that I put it in the lan- the large fishes, like sharks, which swallow pretty nearly everything that comes in their direction, and have stomachs as elastic. He confines himself to the smaller fry, and tells these stories of odd finds: Not long ago a fish merchant found the amber mouthpiece and a portion of the meerschaum stem of a pipe in a codfish he was dressing for a customer. At Scarborough the writer saw a child's coral which, not half an hour before, had been, on the most undeniable testimony, extracted from the gullet of a good-sized conger. That bright objects attract the attention of fishes is undeniable, and at one of the great London clubs recently a silver spoon was found in a fine salmon. The spoon had upon it the crest of a wellknown nobleman, and inquiry showed that the latter had been cruising about in his yacht in the very district where the fish had been caught. The voracity of the pike is notorious, but a year or two back, in a loch of the canal at Caton, near Lancaster, Eng., a huge pike was caught which had swallowed an assortment of hardware, including some pieces of tin toy, a spinning bait and hooks attached complete, an oldfashioned two-penny piece, and the head and part of the wood of a tackhammer.

SWALLOWED BY FISHES. Stories of Odd Finds Related by an Eng-

WOMAN'S WORLD IN PARAGRAPHS.

A Toiler Who Has Entered Into Nobly

Earned Rest. One of the bravest, sweetest champions of the woman cause that ever drew breath went away from us when Lucy Stone passed out of life. No woman could have died in this generation whose loss would have been more sorely felt. There was none who gave herself more unreservedly, sacredly and modestly to the work she chose in her youth. The first equal rights speech I ever heard was made by Lucy Stone, and it was an inspiration to me. I was converted then and there, and I have never wavered from that day to this. The woman movement is as much a part of the history of our country as the antislavery movement, and in both of these Lucy Stone bore noble part. The story of the struggle of the women of America for their legal, civil and social rights will form one of the grandest chapters in the record of human progress. It almost brings tears to the eyes now to recall how Lucy Stone, a slender, gentle girl, only strong in her righteousness, was mobbed, hissed and howled at 40 years ago, and her life even endangered, for the mere speaking out of ringing words for freedom. I remember reading once how some roughs removed a pane of glass from the window behind the platform where she stood to speak and turned a stream of ice water down her back in the dead of winter. Lucy Stone simply drew her shawl around her and went on speaking. It makes one feel deathly ashamed for one's countrymen to write a full history of this beloved, lamented lady, putting in all the incidents | tle. of her life that they can find. Every scrap of Lucy Stone's life history will be a precious legacy to the women that now are and to the women who come after her. If she had never a complished anything else, the recital of how heroically she worked to educate herself and how against such odds as no woman need brave now, thanks to her and those like her, she at last succeeded-this of itself would be an inspiration to ambitious rest, for she did not live to cast her full

Y., has been nominated for school commissioner under circumstances which do credit to both her and the gentlemen who brought or of iridescent hues.—Jewelers' Circuher name forward. The nomination was given to a woman in order to get the control of the public schools of the island out of politics. Mrs. West's name was received with rousing cheers, and it is believed she has quite as many friends among Democrats as among the Republicans, by whom she was nominated, so that her election seems sure. She is a lady of the highest standing socially, which would not help her much in her duties as school commissioner. But she is fortunately also comparatively well acquainted with public life, having taken active part for years in educational and benevolent work. "The true woman must always accept her laurel crown with tears, for she feels that she has lost much to gain it," says the New York Herald. What has she lost?
